Keynote Session

 July 10(Wed), 10:00-10:40 | #401

The keynote session features Dr. Richard D. Braatz, a distinguished professor of chemical engineering at MIT, who has made significant contributions to the advancement of biotechnology.

Current Status and Promise of mRNA Biotherapeutics

The value of mRNA biotherapeutics has been proven with the development of mRNA-based vaccines during the recent pandemic.

The ability to rapidly produce biotherapeutics through cell-free synthesis was crucial during the pandemic, highlighting the importance of process development speed and the challenge of reducing production and purification costs for biotherapeutics.

This keynote session will share the current status of vaccine and non-vaccine biotherapeutic applications and provide directions for future possibilities.
